

6.2

Interacting with local and broader communities.

Parents or special contacts can be used to provide specialised expertise or input into a topic.

Where possible teachers should arrange studies that involve the local community or use the local surroundings as a resource.

Individual students can be targeted to attend special camps and conferences. Students should be encouraged to develop their own networks.

Links and collaboration between schools and classrooms should be established. The internet could be used as a tool to achieve this.